Short Answer

1. What were bridewells? Why were they used in early English corrections?

Ans: Answers will vary. Students should mention that bridewells were workhouses for beggars, debtors, and other "undesirables." The rationale was that labor could be extracted from these individuals.

Learning Objective: 2.2: Compare the different types of corrections used historically.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Poverty and Bridewells, Debtors' Prisons, and Houses of Correction

Difficulty Level: Medium

2. Compare early gaols in England to their counterparts today.

Ans: Answers will vary. Gaols were early jails that were usually in English dungeons or Catholic monasteries. They held political adversaries and commoners to punish them, incapacitate them, or hold them over for judgment.

6. What was Walnut Street Jail? Evaluate its significance in the history of American corrections.

Ans: Answers will vary. The Walnut Street Jail was built in 1773 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. It was a typical local jail that held pretrial detainees and minor offenders. Furthermore, it used the fee system, which penalized the poor, but allowed those who could pay to have nicer accommodations, as well as access to liquor and sex to those who could pay for it. It was remodeled and had a new philosophy starting in 1790.

Learning Objective: 2.5: Evaluate the two predominant prison systems of the early 1800s and their strengths and weaknesses.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: The Walnut Street Jail

Essay

1. Discuss the impact Maconochie had on Norfolk Island.

Ans: Answers will vary. Maconochie transformed what was one of the most brutal convict settlements in history into a controlled, stable, and productive environment. Its prisoners, upon release, came to be called "Maconochie's gentlemen." Maconochie believed that inmates should be rewarded for good behavior using a marks system, which led to privileges and early release. He also thought that they should be treated with respect and adequately fed and housed.

Learning Objective: 2.2: Compare the different types of corrections used historically.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Transportation

Difficulty Level: Medium

2. Assess the influence of the Enlightenment on correctional thinking.

Ans: Answers will vary. Strong answers will cite the Enlightenment's rejection of traditional ideas about punishment. These were replaced by a more rational approach to such things as human rights, liberty, and justice. Students should cite Enlightenment thinkers, such as Bentham, Beccaria, Howard, and Penn, who influenced this period of correctional history. They may discuss how their ideas about punishment led to early attempts at reform and continue to guide sentencing.

Learning Objective: 2.3: Identify some of the key Enlightenment thinkers, their ideas, and how they changed corrections.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Enlightenment—Paradigm Shift

Difficulty Level: Medium

3. Compare and contrast the Pennsylvania and New York systems.

Ans: Answers will vary. The Western Pennsylvania Prison was built in Pittsburgh and the Eastern Pennsylvania Prison was built in Philadelphia. Western Pennsylvania Prison held inmates in solitary confinement for the span of their sentences. At Eastern, the inmates were also in solitary confinement but were able to work in their cells. The New York system did not use solitary confinement. Rather, they allowed the inmates to work together, but they had to do so in silence.

Learning Objective: 2.5: Evaluate the two predominant prison systems of the early 1800s and their strengths and weaknesses.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Early Modern Prisons

Difficulty Level: Medium

4. What was the marks system? Discuss its role in early American corrections.

Ans: Answers will vary. The marks system is based on the premise that if an inmate behaves, it is possible to earn marks that entitle one to privileges. They can also lead to an early release. Maconochie and Crofton used the marks system. It was also used at the Elmira Reformatory.

Learning Objective: 2.7: Explain why reform of prisons and jails was needed and how those reform efforts worked out.
