Chapter 2: Constructing Financial Statements

True/False

Topic: Assets

LO: 1

1. Companies may not report internally created assets, such as the value of a successful marketing campaign, design innovations and a highly motivated work force on their balance sheets.

Answer: True

Rationale: Even though these “assets” probably provide future benefits to the company that will be reflected in the company’s market value and in future revenues, these amounts cannot be reliably measured. They are excluded from the balance sheet under GAAP.

Topic: Historical cost

LO: 1

2. Assets such as inventory and property, plant, and equipment are reported on the balance sheet at their current market value.

Answer: False

Rationale: These assets are generally reported at historical cost.

Topic: Reporting of assets

Answer: False

Rationale: Assets are reported in the order of liquidity which reflects the ease of converting into cash. Receivables are reported before inventories, and inventories before PPE. Liabilities are reported in order of maturity, with current liabilities expected to be paid within one year or within the operating cycle, and long-term liabilities expected to be paid over a longer period of time.

Topic: The double-entry accounting system

LO: 1

4. Under the double-entry accounting system, no more than two accounts can be affected by each transaction.

Answer: False

Rationale: Each transaction recorded under the double-entry accounting system must affect at least two accounts. It can affect more than two.

Topic: Transaction analysis

Topic: Accrual accounting

LO: 4

8. Accrual accounting recognizes revenues only when cash is received and expenses only when cash is paid.

Answer: False

Rationale: Accrual accounting refers to the recognition of revenue when earned and the matching of expenses when incurred. The recognition of revenues and expenses does not always relate to the receipt or payment of cash.

Topic: Matching principle

LO: 4

9. Under the matching principle, the cost of inventory should be reported as an expense in the income statement when it is purchased, even if it is purchased on credit and will not be paid until the next reporting period.

Answer: False

Rationale: Under the matching principle, the cost of inventory should only be reported as expense in the period in which it is used up, typically at the point of sale. Purchased inventories that have not yet been sold are reported as assets. Unpaid amounts to suppliers are reported as liabilities.

Topic: Analyzing and recording equity transactions

Topic: Historical cost vs. Market value

LO: 1

1. With few exceptions, why do we report most assets at their original acquisition price (historical cost) and not at current market value?

Answer:

When company valuation is the goal, accurate and current market values of assets are preferred. For some assets like marketable securities, values are readily obtained from online quotes. For other assets like property, plant and equipment, we can only estimate their market values until they are ultimately sold. Allowing companies to report estimates of market values for assets would introduce potential bias into financial reporting, thus lessening financial statement reliability and usefulness.

Topic: Intangible assets vs. Tangible assets

LO: 1

2. Compare and contrast intangible and tangible assets.

Answer:

Intangible assets are similar to property, plant and equipment (PP&E) in that they are owned and controlled by the company and the company expects to realize future benefits from the use of the asset. For example, an internally created intangible asset, such as Mickey Mouse in the case of Walt Disney, is owned and controlled by Walt Disney and the company certainly anticipates that it will generate future sales from Mickey Mouse.

Despite these similarities, Mickey Mouse cannot be capitalized because its historical cost is not reliably measurable. In contrast, the historical cost of PP&E is reliably measurable, and, therefore, can be capitalized on the balance sheet.

Topic: Undervalued assets

LO: 1

3. Prepare a list of two possible undervalued assets on the balance sheet of a company. Indicate how these items can be undervalued.

Answer:

Land is an asset that can often be undervalued on a balance sheet because it is typically an appreciating asset. Inventories are often carried at cost, below their current market price if prices rise since the items were acquired.
