71. Norwest Trucking Corporation files a suit in a state court against Bob's Service Company (BSC), and wins. BSC appeals the court's decision, as-ert-ing that the evidence presented at trial to support Norwest's claim was so scanty that no reasonable jury could have found for the plaintiff. There-fore, argues BSC, the appellate court should reverse the trial court's de-ci-sion. Is the appellate court likely to reverse the trial court's findings with re-spect to the facts? If not, why not? What are an appellate court's options after re-viewing a case?

ANSWER: An appellate court will reverse a lower court's decision on the basis of the facts if the evidence does not support the findings or if it con-tra-dicts them. Appellate courts normally defer to a trial court's decision with re-gard to the facts of a case, however, for several reasons. First, trial judges and juries have the op-portunity to observe witnesses and tangible evidence first hand. The ap-pellate court sees only a cold record of the trial court proceedings and therefore cannot make the kind of judg-ments about the credibility of wit-nesses and the per-suasiveness of evidence that can be gleaned only from first-hand experi-ence. Second, as occurs when there is no jury and the case is heard by a judge, trial judges routinely sit as fact finders. As a result, they develop a particular expertise in de-termining what kind of evidence and testimony is reliable and what kind is not. (There are also constitu-tional reasons for an appel-late court to de-fer to a jury verdict. If, based on the evidence pre-sented to a jury, a rea-sonable person could have come to the same de-ci-sion that the jury came to, an ap-pellate court cannot reverse the jury's decision with regard to the facts be-cause this would, in essence, take away a person's right to a jury trial.) An appellate court's options after re-viewing a case are to affirm the trial court's judgment, to reverse it in whole, to reverse it in part, to modify the decision, or to remand the case for further proceedings.

72. Discount Mart, Inc., files a suit in a state court against Elements Computer Corporation, alleging that Elements breached a contract to sell 500 notebook computers to Discount. During the course of the suit, Discount files a motion for judgment on the pleadings, Elements files a motion for a directed verdict, and both parties file motions for summary judgment. When and for what pur-pose are each of these motions made?

ANSWER: After the pleadings have been filed, either party can file a mo-tion for judgment on the pleadings. This motion may be used when no facts are disputed and, thus, only questions of law are at issue. The dif-ference be-tween this motion and a motion for summary judgment is that the party re-questing the motion may support a motion for summary judgment with sworn statements and other materials; on a motion for a judgment on the pleadings, a court may consider only those facts pleaded. At the conclusion of the plain-tiff's case, the defendant can file a motion for a directed verdict (federal courts use the term motion for a judgment as a matter of law), asking the court to direct a verdict for the defendant on the ground that the plaintiff has presented no evidence to justify the granting of the plaintiff's remedy. In con-sidering the motion, the judge looks at the evidence in the light most favor-able to the plaintiff and grants the motion only if there is insufficient evi-dence to raise an is-sue of fact. At the end of the defen-dant's case, either party can move for a directed ver-dict. If the only question is which laws apply to the facts in a case, either party can move for summary judgment before or during a trial. When a court considers a motion for summary judgment, it can take into account evidence outside the pleadings. The evidence may con-sist of sworn state-ments by parties or witnesses, as well as documents. A motion for sum-mary judg-ment will be granted only when there are no genuine questions of fact, and the only question is a question of law.
