A. privatization
B. nationalization
C. liberalization
D. socialization of production

In many countries, state-owned companies performed poorly. As a consequence, a number of Western democracies voted many social democratic parties out of office in the late 1970s and early 1980s. They were succeeded by political parties, such as Britain's Conservative Party and Germany's Christian Democratic Party, that were more committed to free market economics. These parties sold state-owned enterprises to private investors (a process referred to as privatization).

D. A political police force and armed service

To guarantee that elected representatives are being held accountable for their actions by the electorate, an ideal representative democracy incorporates safeguards that are enshrined in constitutional law. These safeguards include an individual's right to freedom of expression, opinion, and organization; a free media; regular elections in which all eligible citizens are allowed to vote; universal adult suffrage; limited terms for elected representatives; a fair court system that is separate for the political system; a nonpolitical state bureaucracy; a nonpolitical police force and armed service; and relatively free access to state information.

A. Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS)
B. Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property
C. United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods (CIGS)
D. World Trade Organization (WTO)

When contract disputes arise in international trade, there is always the question of which country's laws to apply. To resolve this issue, a number of countries, including the United States, have ratified the United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods (CIGS). The CIGS establishes a uniform set of rules governing certain aspects of the making and performance of everyday commercial contracts between sellers and buyers who have their places of business in different nations. By adopting the CIGS, a nation signals to other adopters that it will treat the convention's rules as part of its law. The CIGS applies automatically to all contracts for the sale of goods between different firms based in countries that have ratified the convention, unless the parties to the contract explicitly opt out.

- A. Costs are tightly controlled and business are forced to be efficient rather than dynamic and innovative.
- B. The abolition of private ownership means there is no incentive for individuals to look for better ways to serve consumer needs.
- C. All economic resources are mobilized for the public good.
- D. Individuals in command economy countries lack the skills to be innovative.

The objective of a command economy is to mobilize economic resources for the public good, however the opposite usually occurs. In a command economy, state-owned enterprises have little incentive to control costs and be efficient, because they cannot go out of business. Also, the abolition of private ownership means there is no incentive for individuals to look for better ways to serve consumer needs; hence, dynamism and innovation are absent from command economies. Instead of growing and becoming more prosperous, such economies tend to stagnate.

- A. Calls for the payment of monetary damages
- B. They are more extensive in Western Europe than in any other region of the world
- C. Results in fines or imprisonment
- D. They are less impactful if the product does not conform to the required safety standards

Product liability involves holding a firm and its officers responsible when a product causes injury, death, or damage. Product liability can be much greater if a product does not conform to required safety standards. Both civil and criminal product liability laws exist. Civil laws call for payment and monetary damages. Criminal liability laws result in fines or imprisonment. Both civil and criminal liability laws are probably more extensive in the United States than in any other country, although many other Western nations also have comprehensive liability laws. Liability laws are typically least extensive in less developed nations.

Tribal totalitarianism has arisen from time to time in African countries such as Zimbabwe, Tanzania, Uganda, and Kenya. The borders of most African states reflect the administrative boundaries drawn by the old European colonial powers rather than tribal realities. Consequently, the typical African country contains a number of tribes (e.g., in Kenya there are more than 40 tribes). Tribal totalitarianism occurs when a political party that represents the interests of a particular tribe (and not always the majority tribe) monopolizes power.

Essay Questions

95. Why did Karl Marx criticize capitalism? Describe how he planned to correct those shortcomings.

Modern socialists trace their intellectual roots to Karl Marx. Marx argued that the few benefit at the expense of the many in a capitalist society where individual freedoms are not restricted. While successful capitalists accumulate considerable wealth, Marx postulated that the wages earned by the majority of workers in a capitalist society would be forced down to subsistence levels. He argued that capitalists expropriate for their own use the value created by workers, while paying workers only subsistence wages in return. According to Marx, the pay of workers does not reflect the full value of their labor. To correct this perceived wrong, Marx advocated state ownership of the basic means of production, distribution, and exchange (i.e., businesses). His logic was that if the state owned the means of production, the state could ensure that workers were fully compensated for their labor. Thus, the idea is to manage state-owned enterprise to benefit society as a whole, rather than individual capitalists.

96. Discuss collectivism. What ideals does the philosophy support? Where did the philosophy start? How does collectivism exist in the modern world?

A collectivist political system is one that stresses the primacy of collective goals over individual goals. In that sense, the needs of the society as a whole are viewed as being more important than individual freedoms. Collectivism can trace its roots to the ancient Greek philosopher Plato who suggested that individual rights be sacrificed for the good of the majority. Today, collectivism is reflected in the socialist movement started by Karl Marx who argued that the few benefit at the expense of the many in a capitalist society where individual freedoms are not restricted. Marx advocated state ownership of the basic means of production, distribution, and exchange. Supporters of Marx's ideals were divided into two camps in the early 20th century: communists, who believed that socialism could only be achieved through violent revolution and totalitarian dictatorship; and social democrats, who committed themselves to achieving socialism by democratic means. Today, both versions of socialism are losing followers.

A state-owned company is a company that is owned by a nation's government. After World War II, many social democratic governments nationalized private companies that were to be run for the public good rather than private profit. Great Britain, for example, nationalized so many companies that by the end of the 1970s, state-owned monopolies existed in telecommunications, electricity, gas, coal, and several other industries. However, because state-run companies such as the ones that existed in Great Britain are protected from competition by their monopoly position and guaranteed financial support, they become inefficient.

Individualism refers to a philosophy that an individual should have freedom in his/her economic and political pursuits. Accordingly, the philosophy stresses that the interests of the individual should take precedence over the interests of the state. Individualism can be traced to the ancient Greek philosopher Aristotle who argued that individual diversity and private ownership are desirable. Aristotle's philosophy was refined by David Hume, Adam Smith, and John Stuart Mill in the 1700s and 1800s, and more recently by Milton Friedman, Friedrich von Hayek, and James Buchanan. Today, individualism translates into an advocacy for democratic political systems and free market economies.

The pure form of democracy is based on a belief that citizens should be directly involved in decision making. In contrast, in a representative democracy, citizens periodically elect individuals to represent them. The elected individuals form a government and make decisions on behalf of the electorate. Because a pure democracy is impractical in advanced societies with tens or hundreds of millions of people, representative democracies are far more common in today's world.

In a totalitarian country, an individual's right to freedom of expression and organization, a free media, and regular elections are denied to the citizens. There are four forms of totalitarianism. Communist totalitarianism was until recently the most widespread form of totalitarianism. This form of totalitarianism advocates that socialism can only be achieved through totalitarian dictatorship. Theocratic totalitarianism is found in states where political power is monopolized by a party, group, or individual that governs according to religious principles. Tribal totalitarianism occurs when a political party that represents the interests of a particular tribe monopolizes power. Right-wing totalitarianism permits some individual economic freedoms but restricts individual political freedom.

101. Identify the three types of economic systems. How do these three types of economic systems differ from each other? How are they the same?

In a pure market economy, all productive activities are privately owned. Production is determined by supply and demand, and signaled to producers through the price system. The role of the government in a pure market economy is to encourage vigorous free and fair competition between private producers. In a command economy, the goods and services that a country produces, the quantity in which they are produced, and the prices at which they are sold are all planned by the government. The government's role is to allocate resources for the good of the society. In addition, all businesses are state owned. A mixed economy is a combination of the other economic systems in which certain sectors of the economy are left to private ownership and free market mechanisms, while other sectors have significant state ownership and government planning.

102. Discuss why there is inefficiency in a monopoly situation. What is the role of the government in such a situation?

In a monopoly situation, a firm has no competitors, and therefore it has no incentive to search for ways to lower production costs. Rather, cost increases are simply passed on to consumers in the form of higher prices. The net result is that the monopolist is likely to become increasingly inefficient, producing high-priced, low-quality goods. Given the dangers inherent in monopoly, the role of government in a market economy is to encourage vigorous free and fair competition between private producers. Governments do this by outlawing restrictive business practices designed to monopolize a market (antitrust laws serve this function in the United States).

103. Discuss the effects of private ownership of production in a market economy.

Private ownership encourages vigorous competition and economic efficiency. Private ownership ensures that entrepreneurs have a right to the profits generated by their own efforts. This gives entrepreneurs an incentive to search for better ways of serving consumer needs. That may be through introducing new products, by developing more efficient production processes, by pursuing better marketing and after-sale service, or simply through managing their businesses more efficiently than their competitors. In turn, the constant improvement in product and process that results from such an incentive has been argued to have a major positive impact on economic growth and development.

The legal system of a country refers to the rules, or laws, that regulate behavior along with the processes by which laws are enforced through which redress for grievances are obtained. It is critical that international companies understand a country's legal system because the legal system regulates business practice, defines the manner in which business transactions are to be executed, and sets down the rights and obligations of those involved in business transactions.

106. Discuss the ways in which public action to violate property rights can occur.

Public action to violate property rights occurs when public officials, such as politicians and government bureaucrats, extort income, resources, or the property itself from property holders. This can be done through legal mechanisms such as levying excessive taxation, requiring expensive licenses or permits from property holders, taking assets into state ownership without compensating the owners, or redistributing assets without compensating the prior owners. It can also be done through illegal means, or corruption, by demanding bribes from businesses in return for the rights to operate in a country, industry, or location.

107. What are the factors that contribute to the attractiveness of a country as a market or investment site?

The political, economic, and legal environments of a country clearly influence the attractiveness of that country as a market or investment site. The benefits, costs, and risks associated with doing business in a country are a function of that country's political, economic, and legal systems. The overall attractiveness of a country as a market or investment site depends on balancing the likely long-term benefits of doing business in that country against the likely costs and risks.

Learning Objective: 02-04 Explain the implications for management practice of national differences in political economy.

108. Discuss the key factors that companies must be aware of before deciding to do business in other countries.

The political, economic, and legal systems of a country raise important issues that have implications for the practice of international business. For example, what ethical implications are associated with doing business in totalitarian countries where citizens are denied basic human rights, corruption is rampant, and bribes are necessary to gain permission to do business? The other important factor is that the benefits, costs, and risks associated with doing business in another country are a function of that country's political economic, and legal systems. Companies must balance the likely long-term benefits of doing business in that country against likely costs and risks.
