Answer:

Reasons for not reporting a crime such as sexual assault include (1) the victim's fear of the perpetrator; (2) the victim's shame, which may carry over from traditional attitudes about sexual behaviour and a woman's role in sexual encounters; (3) fears the victim may have of not being believed; and (4) the victim's fear of further participation in the justice system (such as the possibility of the victim being required to go to court and testify against the offender, thereby exposing herself to potentially embarrassing cross-examination and public scrutiny).

55) Briefly define what can be considered the “social dimensions of crime.”

Answer:

The social dimensions of crime are generally referred to as aspects of crime and victimization as they relate to socially significant attributes by which groups are defined, and according to which individuals are assigned group membership. Socially significant attributes include sex and gender, ethnicity or race, age, income or wealth, profession, and social class or standing within society. Such personal characteristics provide criteria by which individuals can be assigned to groups such as “the rich,” “the poor,” “male,” “female,” “young,” “old,” “black,” “white,” “white-collar worker,” “manual labourer,” and so on.

56) According to the Ministry of Industry, 2013, report, what were the two key responses to violence against women in Canada?

Answer:

First, and according to victimization data, less than one-third (30%) of female victims of spousal violence stated that the incident came to the attention of the police, down from 36% in 2004. No change was recorded in the levels of reporting to police for non-spousal violence against women (28%). Second, certain types of spousal violence were more likely to come to the attention of police, including incidents where the woman was sexually assaulted (53%) or beaten, choked, or had a weapon used against her (60%). By contrast, sexual assaults perpetrated by someone other than a spouse were least likely to come to the attention of police. None in 10 non-spousal sexual assaults were never reported to the police.
