Subjective Short Answer

41. Why have myths developed about entrepreneurs?

ANSWER: Entrepreneurs make up a relatively small portion of the population. They have the potential to become very rich and the potential to lose large sums of money. The media give them disproportionate coverage because of the risks and potential rewards and because they are different from most managers. Myths develop as people try to understand the "art" of entrepreneurship.

42. Discuss the home-based entrepreneur.

ANSWER: Home-based entrepreneurs can be found in retail, services, health care, and literally any other industry. They represent 52 percent of all small business, and many of these are hobby businesses, consulting, and freelance-type businesses, but some compete in the same arena as brand name businesses with large facilities. Home-based business owners can tap into more resources than ever before from their desktops or mobile devices to locate help for any problem they may be facing, from finding business forms to seeking legal advice to learning how to start and run a business. In addition, U.S. tax laws have become friendlier to home-based business owners, who can take a deduction for their home office space and appropriate business expenses.
