103. What are the six competitive challenges facing human resources management departments?

ANSWER: The six competitive challenges facing human resources departments are (1) globalization, (2) embracing new technology, (3) managing change, (4) developing human capital, (5) responding to the market, and (6) containing costs.

(1) First, in order to grow and prosper, many companies are seeking business opportunities in global markets. HR issues underlie concerns related to managing diverse cultures, geographies, laws, and business practices.

(2) Second, the introduction of advanced technology has created a shift from touch labour to knowledge workers, impacting the way in which workers are managed. In addition, technology has altered the methods of collecting employment information, speeding up the processing of that data, and improving the process of internal and external communication.

(3) Third, to become faster and more adaptable, many organizations are seeking ways to manage change. Programs such as TQM, downsizing, reengineering, outsourcing, and the like are examples of changes that organizations are making to modify the way they operate to be more successful. Each of these change efforts depends heavily on the adjustment of HR practices to facilitate and manage evolving issues related to an organization's workforce.

(4) Fourth, organizational success is increasingly recognized as resting upon a firm's ability to manage human capital. HR practices are the fundamental tools by which organizations build, enhance, and maintain their stock of human capital.

(5) Fifth, meeting the demands of the market is an important criterion for organizational success. Management innovations such as TQM and reengineering represent two prominent approaches to responding to customer demands.

(6) Finally, containing costs, especially labour costs, is an important component of organizational success. As a result, many firms have engaged in initiatives such as downsizing, outsourcing, and employee leasing as a means to realize greater cost controls. Each of these practices has significant implications for HR practices. For example, during a downsizing initiative, HR has an obligation to help maintain a healthy relationship between a company and its employees through services such as outplacement.

104. Describe the key competencies of HR managers and professionals.

Chapter 1 - The World of Human Resources Management

ANSWER: HR managers and professionals are expected to have four key competencies:

1. Business mastery. HR professionals need to know the business of their organizations. This may involve aspects of business acumen, customer and client orientation, and a good understanding of external relations. They require an understanding of the organization's economic and financial capabilities so that they can become a key member of the team of business managers to develop the firm's strategic direction. HR professionals also need skills in external relations focused on their customers.
2. HR mastery. HR professionals are the organization's behavioural science experts. They need to be proficient in the core aspects of the field/HR function, including staffing, development, appraisals, rewards, team building, and communication.
3. Change mastery. HR professionals must be able to recognize the need for change and understand how effective change can be implemented. Such change efforts should be grounded in HR managers'/professionals' interpersonal skills and influence, their problem-solving skills, and their effective use of rewards systems, among others. They need to manage change processes so that their firm's HR activities are effectively merged with the business needs of their organizations.
4. Personal credibility. HR professionals must establish personal credibility in the eyes of internal and external stakeholders. Credibility and trust are earned through ethical personal relationships with one's customers, demonstrating the values of the firm, standing up for one's own beliefs, and being fair-minded when dealing with others.
