Essay Questions

1. Compare and contrast two of the different types of small businesses.

Student answers will vary.

Food Service and Home-Based. Food service businesses are a common type of home-based business, but not all home-based businesses are in the food service industry. Home-based businesses tend to be sole proprietorships or family owned businesses, while food service ones do lend themselves to this structural model, they are also frequently a franchised business opportunity. Starting a home-based food service business can be difficult, usually due to the need for a separate space that is used for the preparation of the food, and the attendant health and safety regulations that come with it; other food service businesses that operate in a stand-alone building or as a store front tend to come built with such facilities. With the proliferation of food trucks and third-party delivery services, food can be prepared at home and presented to customers in a variety of ways that were not necessarily available twenty to thirty years ago.

2. Explain the differences between a small business and an entrepreneurial venture.

Small businesses tend to deal with a specific, narrow set of inputs and outputs – they will frequently need the same supplies on a regular or semi-regular basis while producing a narrow range of products and/or services. There may be seasonal or other forms of variation in this, but small businesses tend to deal with known constraints and risks. Entrepreneurial ventures, on the other hand, tend to be expansionary and innovative, dealing with a variable set of inputs and a growing or changing set of outputs. The ultimate goals of the two types tend to be different as well. Small businesses tend to operate for the long-haul (if possible) for the purposes of stability, expanding when necessary, possible, and desirable. The owners of an entrepreneurial venture, however, may wish to see their venture become viable and then be sold at a significant profit, sometimes with that money then used to start up the next entrepreneurial venture.

3. Explain the importance of small businesses to the American economy.

Small businesses make up approximately 50% of the Gross Domestic Product (GDP) of the United States in most years. They employ just under half of all people in the country, while accounting for just over half of all sales of goods and services. They have historically been a path for integrating immigrants into the country. They can propel both immigrants and native-born populations onto the path of financial independence and success. In some instances, a small business may grow and evolve into a large venture.

4. Explain some of the benefits of owning your own business.

For many small-business owners, flexibility and autonomy are the major, driving reasons for going into business for themselves. The flexibility to set your own work schedule allows for parents, students, and those working a different job the opportunity to strike out on their own while still being tethered to something familiar. Personal autonomy is another important factor – not having to report to a boss can provide an invigorating feeling every day. These two factors fit with other, positive aspects of business ownership that include: the ability to pursue your own goals and passions, the time to watch something grow and develop that you created, the opportunity to improve, and the chance to invest in yourself and your family.

5. Describe the positive and negative aspects of owning a small business.

Being able to set your own schedule is one positive aspect, but small business owners need to be flexible, because owning a small business will be demanding. While you do not necessarily have to deal with a boss, as you are your own boss, you do have to answer to different people: suppliers, customers, employees, and regulators. A small business, depending on the type and number of employees, could fall under the purview of certain local, state, and potentially even federal regulators and rule-making bodies. Money is also fundamentally important, as it is used to pay suppliers, employees, and ideally yourself; however, many small businesses struggle with cash-flow issues within their first few years. Some owners also rush into starting their own business, and do not have the financial capital to back it up, leading to cash-flow stability issues. However, even with all these issues, small businesses do account for more than 99% of all businesses in the United States; therefore, being successful in operating a small business involves managing the risks involved and having a backup plan if something unexpected occurs.
